

AT&T Web-Based Resources

Capitalize on valuable resources designed for small businesses

If your business were a large corporation, you might rely on an in-house corporate resource center for your varied research and information needs. Since it is a small business, however, you need a different kind of resource center – one that AT&T has researched, prepared and now makes available to you.

The online resource for small business

AT&T maintains an online small business resource center at att.com/smallbusinessInSite and packs it with valuable resources designed specifically for small businesses. These resources include practical “how to” articles, podcasts, and videos to help small businesses leverage technology effectively. Additional site features include free online seminars, one-on-one advice from small business experts, and valuable offers from AT&T and other leading companies. The website also offers you the ability to personalize your online experience.

AT&T InSite News, the eNewsletter for small business

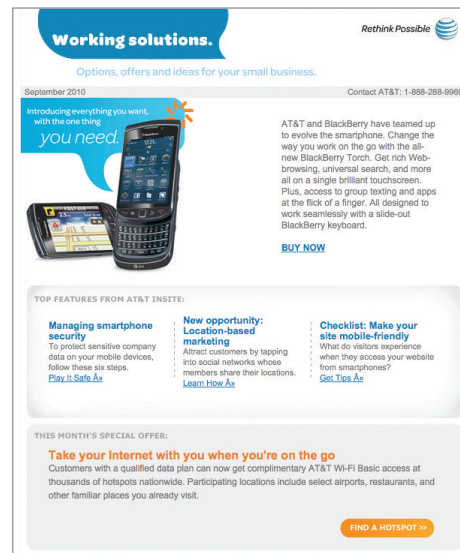

Also on att.com/smallbusinessInSite, you'll be able to register for AT&T InSite News, a monthly eNewsletter that can be delivered right to your inbox. AT&T InSite News includes thought-provoking articles, small business news and tips, online event information, online courses, and special offers. Examples of the content include information on new technologies, small business news and strategies, communication plans, and so much more. So enjoy AT&T InSite News and let it be the catalyst that moves your business forward into new and productive territory.

BENEFITS

- Utilize valuable information that could give you an edge in your small business
- Receive valuable monthly information automatically without performing original or secondary research

FEATURES

- Capitalize on extensive resources designed specifically for small businesses
- Receive AT&T InSite News every month in your inbox

To register and begin receiving the newsletter for small businesses, go to att.com/smallbusinessInSite.

